The South American dwarf cichlids comprise a total of some 150 species, all of which are readily maintained and bred in the aquarium. In addition there are cultivated forms of some species that exist only in captivity. These cultivated forms differ from the natural or wild forms mainly in their coloration, although there are also long-finned cultivated forms of the Butterfly Dwarf Cichlid (Mikrogeophagus ramirezi).

Dwarf South American Cichlids are found in a wide range of habitats from tropical rainforest to open savannah. They typically inhabit slow moving streams and rivers, quiet backwaters, oxbows and other still water areas. Leaf litter often covers the bottom, and light is subdued due to overhanging vegetation and/or aquatic plants. Water
